

Stanley Golf Course:

A major transformation is now complete

The Red comprises the back nine of the White-Red championship 18 at Stanley and features six new greens and new tee boxes on the 16th and 18th holes. The changes are immediately apparent to anyone who has played the Red before.

For pure aesthetics, the par-4 remade 18th is unsurpassed. Formerly a 500-yard par-5, it begins with an elevated tee box that offers a scenic panorama of the fairway below as well as a new pond that now requires you to carry with your drive.

The new 16th hole brings a new wrinkle, combining the old 16th tee and the old 17th green into a truly challenging test of golf. The tee box points to a downward sloping fairway that doglegs to the right.

As for the latest addition to Stanley, the new Back Nine Tavern offers a remodeled interior and new menus for special events and post-golf enjoyment.

With a full growing season under its belt, the new Red Nine at Stanley Golf Course in New Britain now completes a remarkable transformation of this historic municipal course.

From renovations and hole makeovers, to construction of a vast practice center, Stanley has elevated itself to a new level of public golf. And this season, golfers will see the crown jewel as the decades-old stone clubhouse welcomes the new Back Nine Tavern bar and restaurant.

Stanley has always offered incredible variety, with 27 championship holes spread over three distinct layouts. But the Red Nine, formerly overshadowed by the other two nine-hole layouts, is now the focus of Stanley's latest renaissance.

The new Red Nine has shed its reputation as a back-and-forth, up-and-down journey and is now a mixture of new and old, with a layout that provides diversity and enjoyment.
